"Let the little children come to Me, and don't stop them, because the kingdom of God belongs to such as these," Luke 18:16b

Her big brown eyes

Do you ever read poetry or maybe write it for school? One of our young teens living overseas wrote a poem called "Her big brown eyes" and sent it in for KOMpray. It talks about one of the people she met and about how important it is to tell everyone about God's love. This is a pretty special poem. I know you'll like it!

Please pray for Meredith, the girl who wrote the poem, and pray for the girl with the big brown eyes....

she approaches you with a welcoming smile a warm heart casual looks just like anyone else she seems pleasant someone you would want to get to know you sit down with her and suddenly her eyes meet yours it melts your heart at this awe full sight her eyes are beautiful and charming loving in so many ways they sparkle and show potential but at the same time these eyes are lost ones that have had it all taken away these eyes search for hope these eyes search for grace these eyes are consumed by the flesh her big brown eyes are dark her big brown eyes search you to see if you are what she is looking for "will you show me love?"
"will you give me hope?" you stare into her eyes not knowing how to respond for if you reach out your hand to help you could risk your life for if you tell her of God's love there is a possibility for no tomorrow you turn head but something draws you back towards them God whispers to you

"This is what I have commanded you to do."
"This is what I long for, this is what I desire."
"For I will save this city this country and they will serve me forever more!
So go for this is my mission in progress.
I love these people they are my children."
once more I lift my head up to see her eyes
her big brown eyes
that need the Lord.
